Seagreens: a multi-nutrient for body and earth

February 14, 2007

As a nation we love to pop vitamin and mineral pills as much as kids love to eat Smarties. But not all supplements are equal when it comes to quality and the environment. If you are looking for a supplement that is as environmentally friendly as it is nutritious, try Seagreens. Made from wild, sustainably harvested seaweed, Seagreens supplements and condiments are intensely nutritious.

Known to help fight against cancer, cardiovascular diseases, high cholesterol, candida, hypo- and hyperthyroidism, this blend of seaweeds is also packed with iodine, calcium, and all the B vitamins (including B12). Plus it's a great detoxifier and can help regulate blood sugar and alkaline-acid imbalances. All of which makes it a great supplement for vegetarians, vegans and pregnant women, as well as all of you busy people with busy lives who need that nutritional boost.

Harvested among the remote islands of the Lofoten archipelago, a conservation area off the Lapland coasts of Norway, the Seagreens company is the only ocean-to-table organic and biodynamic wild seaweed producer in the world. And all the packaging is one hundred percent recyclable. So whether you prefer the capsules, food granules or the delicious seaweed culinary ingredient, Seagreens is ideal if you care about body and planet alike.
